

Oregonauthor.com

Jon Remmerde

I'm standing on the corner, in falling rain, holding up a cardboard sign, with bold, black letters, says, "HELP. Help build this website. Donate to help pay expenses of the website. Donate to help pay a small wage to me, the editor, the author, the reader, the songwriter, the guitar player, the singer, the webmaster. I need to pay expenses for living. I keep my website going because I believe feeding our aesthetic needs is almost as important as having enough food for the body. Presenting all my work (and work from others when I find it) on this website helps feed your aesthetic needs and my aesthetic needs.

Donate to become part of building this website. Become part of poetry, of essays, of short stories, readings, songs, presented free to any interested reader, viewer, listener.

Donate to become part of learning how to present music. Become part of sharing songs that improve as I learn. Donate and become part of the energy that builds poetry, essays, stories, original songs and steadily-improving performances of songs. Become part of the energy it takes to build a website, the energy it takes to stand on the corner in falling snow, holding up a cardboard sign that says. HELP ME PLEASE. I'm a hungry, hungry man."